VISIT CLARKSDALE

It took two decades of grassroots effort for Visit Clarksdale and an ad hoc group of supporters to build upon Clarksdale's blues past and to create a tourism future based on 365 nights of blues and a dozen annual festivals. Via a weekly "Sounds Around Town" marketing platform, they grew the music and spread the word, offering visitors live blues every night in restaurants and juke joints for over 3 years running. These tourism efforts fueled downtown revitalization, with increased tourism, an increase in population and an investment in infrastructure. They've gained 30+ overnight apartments, a 20-room hotel and award-winning hostel, whilst restaurant inventory has increased by 400%. When the pandemic hit, Clarksdale moved the music online via LiveFromClarksdale.org, managing to maintain the tourism outreach. The virtual version of Live Blues Music 7 Nights A Week is allowing the city to promote their musicians and venues as they weather the current storm. When the pandemic ends, Clarksdale, Mississippi, is hoping to be able to quickly restart its in-person, Live Blues Music 7 Nights A Week scene – helping to jumpstart local businesses.

MERCER MUSIC AT CAPRICORN

THE MACON MUSIC STORY

There are few places as deep-steeped in musical heritage as Macon, Georgia. Founded in 1823 on the banks of the Ocmulgee River, the legend of Macon's music scene goes even further, all the way to ancient times that still hum from the burial grounds of the Ocmulgee Mounds National Historical Park.

No other midsize city can boast such back-to-back influence and impact on American popular music as Macon. From the tootle-toot flute melodies from noted native poet Sidney Lanier to "Tutti Fruitti's" groundbreaking "wop-bop-a-loo-bop" of native son Little Richard, to the pioneering shape notes of Sacred Harp patriarch Raymond Hamrick to the impassioned strains of "Got-ta, Got-ta" of the King of Soul, Otis Redding, from the yodel Emmett Miller put in country music to the Allman Brothers' uncategorized, improvisational guitar rhythms that gave the world Southern Rock, all roads lead back to Macon.

The former Capricorn Sound Studios has been fully restored as Mercer Music at Capricorn, offering two recording studios, a music incubator for aspiring young musicians and an interpretive area that tells the story of Capricorn and Macon's music heritage through historic artifacts, static exhibits and interactive digital kiosks.
